Many have been the rumors about "ghosts" this last fall. Do not be afraid of them, for there will be a "divine" present who has power over them.

The story of "The Unwritten Law" is one that will be found of interest to the theatre-goer, for it is one of heart interest, with a strong vein of comedy to relieve the sober moments. It is essentially a play of laughter and tears. Paul Featherstone is an artist, and happily married. Two false friends, plot to separate Paul and his wife, which they succeed in doing by making it appear that each is false to the other. Circumstantial evidence has often done this. The husband has suffered from the complaint that has often caused blindness among his class, and when he discovers the falsity of his friend, he resorts to force to chastise the man who slandered his wife and helped to wreck his home. The excitement proves too much for him and blindness follows. What more pitiful picture can you imagine than this man bereft of sight and wife? The female devil has remained to minister to the wants of the blind man in hopes that she will ingratiate herself and win his love. But he never for a moment forgets his wife, even though he believes her false and when she returns, he does not know her, yet he feels the presence that his love has known, and then follows a scene as powerful in its intensity and dramatic strength as that in "Zaza." Still believing her false, he spurns her, but she is a true woman and she sets about to prove her innocence and she succeeds. The husband regains his sight through the dramatic situations that follow and the false friends meet with the fate they deserve, for "the wages of sin, is death." At the opera house Tuesday, Dec. 11th.

What Bronson Howard Said.

In his great play ARISTOCRACY Bronson Howard said "we still protect by physical force the honor of our women." This is true and the sentiment of the community usually supports a wronged man who defends his wife, sister or other female relative by the force of arms. This is the keynote of THE UNWRITTEN LAW and in the great scene of the play the man who has found his home invaded by a false friend—defends his honor with his bare hands. While THE UNWRITTEN LAW is not founded on any story of real life—there are a number of instances of just such vengeance and the play deals with the problem in a new way. This play will be seen at the opera house Tuesday evening, December 11th.
